- 3. Significant of the present phase within the party is the ostentatious favoring of Grotewohl by Semenov, who showed an unaccustomedly friendly bearing toward Grotewohl at the public celebration of the 36th anniversary of the October Revolution, repeatedly engaging him in conversation, laughing with him, etc.
- 4. The prominent emergence into the public eye of Semenov (at a plant meeting in the Kabelwerk Oberspree for the first time) is also regarded as highly significant politically. Semenow is also indefatigably busy behind the screen; for example, he took part with Grotewohl in the conference of cultural workers (Kulturschaffenden) at Dresden on 19 Oct. 53. According to an account of the meeting given by Wilhelm Girnus, the former chief feuilletonist of the SED Central who was dismissed in the Herrnstadt crisis, the meeting came to recriminations such as he (Girnus) had never lived to see in the course of his whole political career. Girnus himself participated. Girnus indicated as the high point a contribution to the discussion by Semenov, who declared the mission of the writer was to be the fanatic and exponent of the truth, and this the sole principle upon which he should work. Thereupon the writer Stefan Heyn rose up and asked Semenov whether the truth could be told about everything -- for example, he might write a book about the 17 Jun, and could he say that it had not been only five percent of the workers? Semenov replied: "Naturally you can write it, but also write that the 17 Jun did not have its beginning on the 16 Jun, but that the 17 Jun belonged to the great proletarian-bourgeois struggle."
- 5. Another important item in this complex: the Bezirk secretary of a mass organization reported that for some time the regular routine meetings with officials of the High Commission had been very frigid. The Soviet officials had let it appear that they continued to support these organizations only as far as they succeeded in reaching a circle of sympathetic bourgeois who had influence in economic and business life (it did not matter if these men obtained membership).
- 6. In the course of these new taction to win men over, the work of the SED in the West and the mass organizations will be separated from the "East work" more sharply than heretofore. There will be a separate West secretaryship, and the entire Western propaganda will be changed. Ebert declared at a meeting: "It no longer makes sense to portray conditions in West Germany as worse than those in the Soviet Zone. The propaganda must adjust itself much more to the West German business boom. The arguments that have been used up to now can no longer be offered Germans."
- 7. Among other things it is planned to bring out a satirical newspaper in Berlin, something on the order of the "Tarantel". In place of the "Deutschlands Stimme" and "Friedenspost" there will be an illustrated weekly paper which will take its one in presswork and design from the West German illustrateds. Harald Hauser is the proposed chief editor.
- 8. In summary the Soviet authorities slowly begin to see the situation in Germany as it really is, and to make themselves independent of the fabricated reports of the SED.
